Join the beginning of a class action lawsuit against those involved in tricking American men into costly and harmful relationships with Russian women who are no more than liars, cheats and prostitutes.

Screen 2:

Have you been a victim of a fraudulent Russian dating, introduction or marriage service whether through a web site, magazine, newspaper or Russian model agency?

Have you suffered financial loss, emotional distress or other harm as a result of using one of these services?

Have you been taken advantage of by a Russian female?

If you have, then find out whether you qualify to join a class action lawsuit to recover your losses and any damages caused you. Any recovery might be tripled depending on the legal nature of the claim. Millions of dollars could be at stake.

The law firm of Roy Den Hollander is looking for victims of these Russian organizations, and their American accomplices, that promise honest relationships with beautiful, wholesome Russian women but end up with the American man defrauded of his money and time.

Perhaps one of the following has happened to you:

- Met a Russian girl on the Internet. After weeks of great emails, she said she was poor and asked to borrow money for food using my master card number. At first it was $50 and $100 dollars, but as I cared more and more for her, she started taking up to $1000. I told her I couldn't afford that, but she said "too bad," then "goodbye."

- Shelled out over $20,000 for what I thought would be a loving Russian wife. Traveled to meet her in Russia, had a great time, everyone was so nice to me, and I fell in love. Brought her back to the US for a visit, and all she wanted to do was lay around watching soap operas, spend my money on jewelry and run up my phone bill talking in Russian to a guy named Vladimir whom she said was just a "good friend." I was crushed. My buddies convinced me to put her on a plane back to Russia, but before I could, she disappeared. Now the US Immigration service is giving me a hard time.
- Traveled to a social gathering in Russia that was advertised in a magazine with pictures of beautiful Russian ladies at a classy hotel nightclub. When I got there, the hotel was a rat hole and the girls hags. I demanded my money back, $5,000, and these big Russian goons pushed me into a corner for a talk. I was happy to get back to the USA in one piece.
- Found it difficult to meet new people after losing my wife, so I answered a magazine ad to correspond with Russian girls. For $1000, I got ten letters with pictures of very pretty women, but when I tried to call them, they didn't exist.
- Spent thousands of dollars traveling to Russia to meet a decent girl through an introduction service, but they all turned out to be high-priced hookers.
- Married a Russian girl who turned out to be a prostitute, member of the Russian mafia, a drug addict, adulteress and thief.

- Married a Russian lady whom as soon as she received her green card, divorced me by lying that I beat her up. The American female judge believed the phony tears and gave my Russian wife $70,000 of the money that I worked hard for.
